CURRICULUM VITAE

Since its inception in August 2006, the popular and award winning blog Please Don't Pass The Nuts, created by Sloane's alter-ego "Allergic Girl", quickly became a respected leading voice for the food allergic community within the blogosphere.

Sloane Allergic Girl® Miller has appeared in national and international media, in print, online, on television and in video including the following media outlets: ABCNews; Allergic Living; CNN; Huffington Post; New York Magazine; NY1; The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal and The Washington Post.

A New York State licensed psychotherapeutic social worker since 2000, Sloane opened a private coaching practice in 2007 for the food allergic, food intolerant and celiac communities. Through Allergic Girl® Resources, Inc., Sloane offers a range of services. She consults with the healthcare restaurant, foodservice and hospitality industries on how best to address food allergy issues as well as offers food allergy coaching services to individuals, couples, families and groups. As a trained mental health worker, who understands the challenges from the inside out, she is uniquely qualified to lead the movement to provide supportive and innovative services to the food allergic community.

Sloane received her Bachelor of Arts degree from Sarah Lawrence College with concentrations in psychology and poetry. She received her Master of Fine Arts degree in Writing and Literature from Bennington College and was nominated for a Pushcart Prize. Continuing her education, Sloane received her Master of Social Work degree from New York University where she was presented with the President's Service Award for Leadership.

She is an active member of the alumni associations of Sarah Lawrence College, Bennington College, New York University, Wadham College (Oxford University) and is a member of the National Association of Social Workers. Sloane obtained the New York City Department of Health's Food Protection Certificate, the ServSafe Food Protection Manager Certification and is certified in CPR and AED by the Red Cross.

Sloane's critically acclaimed lifestyle guide for the food allergic community, Allergic Girl: Adventures in Living Well with Food Allergies, was published by John Wiley & Sons in Spring 2011.

Sloane is a native New Yorker, where she continues to reside.
